A: Since I don't have access to the code of Plaxis, I have no way to be sure of the exact reason, but a guess would be the following: The strain energy functions in Plaxis are simple, least squares-optimized models for a (continuum) material, derived from experimental data of the material tested (in this case, rock). With these types of energy functions, a single linear system is sufficient to analyze the deformation of a material of a given thickness. Hence, the failure to construct this matrix causes the analysis to fail. Perhaps someone more familiar with the program can suggest a solution.

Nets' Balkman to miss the rest of the season with foot injury NEW YORK -- Marcus Williams doesn't want to play with a cramp. The Nets don't want to play with a cramp. So he got a ball and played some on-court basketball on his own Wednesday night. He crumpled immediately. "I'm walking and I heard somebody say, 'Dude, we got to get you to the locker room,' " Williams said. "I said, 'Man, I'm not that serious. I'm just playing.' They were like, 'You're going to the locker room.'" That's what happened to Aron Baynes Wednesday night. He got a cramp in the second half and went to the locker room for treatment. He had to be helped off the court. The Nets have no choice but to hope Baynes is OK. They'd rather not lose him for the rest of the season. "I don't think there's a better player in the league when it comes to that kind of situation," coach Kenny Atkinson said. "Obviously, they play with their heart. There's no doubt about that." The Nets needed Baynes to be aggressive on defense and he was. He had 12 points, six rebounds and three blocks, including a critical fourth-quarter stop on Jason Kidd to preserve the Nets' lead. He didn't appear to have a problem with the cramp until it had happened and he went to the locker room. He returned with 4:40 left and the Nets leading by three. He only played the remainder of the game for about four minutes. Baynes admitted that he felt the cramp as he dribbled, right before he crumpled to the floor. He said the Nets thought he'd

Is this a verse that Christians could quote in a spiritual warfare battle against demons? A: Paul is not telling us to praise God before we sacrifice. He was not even talking about sacrifices. Paul was talking about vocations, a theological term referring to the Christian's calling. Paul is telling us to "Praise be to God", as a reason for praise. The emphasis is on the "why", not the "who". We praise God because He is worthy, and His name is worthy. His name is worthy because He is worthy. The theme is that "everything has a good and a bad side." Therefore, even God is worthy of praise. The converse is also true, namely that God is worthy of praise, as He is worthy of everything. Hence, from one point of view, we can think of the vocations of the church as "worthy" vocations. On the other hand, one could also look at them as "less worthy" vocations. Which one is the appropriate perspective? All this is to say that you could use this passage in a spiritual warfare battle, but you would have to qualify it. Q: Delete Event Log by filename 2d92ce491b
